The speaker pointed out that during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, federal funds collected in Mississippi totaled $88 million, with federal income tax in the state for the same period topping the $165 million mark. Mississippi had the highest percentage of return of any state in the union, he stated. He asserted that in order to cut down government spending, people must begin at home by lowering their demands. "There is more than $16 million in surplus funds in our state's treasury today," he said. "Yet, there is a bill now pending in Washington to build a state hospital at Jackson to be used as a part of a state university. "Mississippi has no net bonded debt whatsoever, and yet it is applying for funds to the federal government, which is already more than $260 billion in debt. This is the reason our taxes go up and our deficit goes up. "The federal government has almost exhausted its sources of revenue, and at the current rate of spending it will soon be necessary to tap the state, county, city and school district sources. This would end in total federalization of the government without changing one word of the constitution—we would have done it by taxation." He asserted that at present military spending is actually in the hands of military men who are trained in war, and war is waste. "These men know only to get results, regardless of cost," he said. "We need men trained in getting results economically in order to get 100 cents out of every dollar." Stennis was introduced by T. V. Gamblin of Philadelphia, vice-president of the outgoing group. President of the Mississippi Bankers Association, L. G. Simmons, of Pontotoc, sounded the keynote of the session by declaring that these group meetings are

Post-Graduate Training To Be Made Available To Mississippi Physicians
A day of formal post-graduate training will be made available to Mississippi physicians at the annual seminar of the Mississippi Chapter of the American Academy of General Practice in Jackson on December 13. The all-day meeting will be the second of the Mississippi chapter's annual seminars, which were begun last year with the purpose of affording the state's opportunity to supplement their study hard-working general practitioners an of medical records and journals by direct contact with the nation's outstanding authorities in specialized field of medicine. The seminar will be held at the Heidelberg Hotel, and will begin at 9 a. m. One of the day's features will be a luncheon address by Dr. Andrew S. Tomb, member of the American Association's Special Committee on Alcoholism, on "The Diagnosis and Treatment of Alcoholism in General Practice." Other nationally-known authorities of the general practitioner will be heard during the day. The seminar will close with a fellowship hour.

proving most helpful in improving bank public relations. John P. Dalton of the firm, Peat, Marwick, Mitchell & Co., of New York, discussing "an internal check and audit program for a small bank," averred that the prime responsibility of every banker is safeguarding investments entrusted to him. Members of the panel discussion were Mrs. H. T. Key, H. S. Snyder, C. H. Hayes, Philadelphia; Robert Thompson Forest; G. F. Openshaw, Laurel; H. E. Sanders, Tom Ward and Jim Cox Wilbourn, Meridian. Their subject was "What the Community Thinks About the Bank." Moderator was E. W. Haining, vice-president, First National Bank and Trust Co., Vicksburg, and chairman, MBA public relations committee. T. V. Gamblin, cashier, Citizens Bank Philadelphia, vice-president of Group Five, presided. Robert Thompson, Forest, was elected new vice-president, and D. U. Madrox, Laurel, group member MBA nominating committee for the 1952 convention.

COASTAL TRADE COMMISSION REPORT
Biloxi Activity High, Jobs Continue—MESC Review
Biloxi, Miss.—Employment remained high, and business activity continued excellent throughout October in the Biloxi area, reports the Biloxi office of the Mississippi employment security commission. The survey states the shut-down on gambling has not affected the area's retail trade. "The tourist trade has fallen off sharply, which is normal for this season, advises the MESC review. But shrimp catches continue to be good; the seafood factories operated with full crews during the month, and prospects are bright for full employment for some time to come, the review states. While the $5,200,000 Wherry housing project is about completed, construction was begun in October on another multi-million dollar building program, with J. A. Jones Construction Company having the overall contract, the report points out, and skilled workers merely transfer around among various phases of the many construction operations underway. "There is still a shortage among the skilled construction trades in this area," concludes the labor market letter.

New Rural Telephone Projects in State to Reach 100 for Year!

More rural Mississippi homes will receive new telephones this year than during any other of Southern Bell's 64 years in the State. . . By the year's end over 100 new rural telephone projects will have been completed, 10 of the State's 13 new rural switching units will have been placed in service, and over 7500 rural homes will have been supplied with telephones for the first time.

Those figures indicate the kind of progress of which Mississippians as a group should be proud. In addition, each of these new subscribers must have that individual sense of comfort, convenience and reassurance brought about by the presence of a telephone in the home.

In these days of high wages and increasing prices it is costing us more every day to extend and improve our facilities just as it is costing us more to maintain good telephone service. Every dollar we pay out buys less than it used to.

Now it may not be easy for you, as a telephone user, to measure how these increased costs should affect your telephone bill. What your telephone is worth to you, however, is another matter. You can measure that. Put that yardstick against your monthly telephone bill and see if you don't agree with the vast majority of telephone subscribers that your telephone is worth far more than it costs always.

The people of the thriving Bunker Hill Community in Marion County have just celebrated another event in the progress of this community—the inauguration of the telephone service.

The celebration took place in the gymnasium of the Bunker Hill Consolidated School which replaced the old log school built many years before the Civil War, when the community got its telephone service.

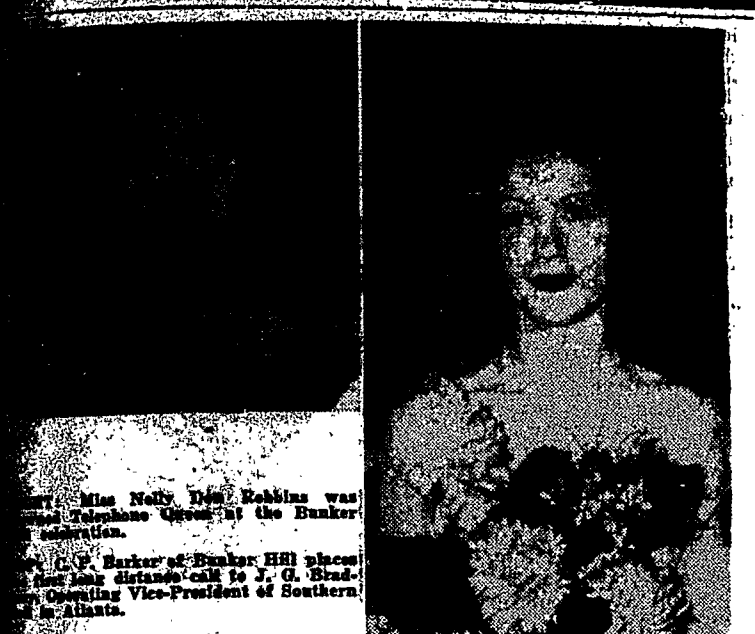

Mr. Harry, Superintendent of the school, was host to a large number of his home people and of the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company representatives, which brings telephone service to approximately 100 families for the first time. Dinner was furnished by ladies of the community.

Principal speakers of the day were Judge Sche Dake, Circuit Judge of the 15th District; Speaker T. E. Harris, Mississippi House of Representatives; W. H. Harris, Division Staff Assistant, and others.

The Bunker Hill community is a part of a rural telephone development program in Mississippi on which Southern Bell has expended approximately $14 million dollars during the past 5 years to more than triple the number of rural telephones in the state.

One of the other speakers on the program was J. O. Cagle, of Columbia, Manager of the Pearl River Valley Electric Power Association. Several hundred of the co-operators' poles were used on the project by a joint-use rental agreement.

Jimmy Shaw, of Bunker Hill, was Master of Ceremonies. Others on the program included Representative-elect Lloyd McGhee, of Columbia; Highway Commissioner John B. Smith, Mendenhall; Mrs. Harold Cooper, President of the Home Demonstration Club; Rev. H. B. Speights, pastor, Bunker Hill Baptist Church; Mrs. L. E. E. Wilkes, Bunker Hill, and L. E. Slawson, Jackson, Rural Development Supervisor for Southern Bell. Music was furnished by the Columbia High School Band, and the program was broadcast over Radio Station WCJU, Columbia.

Miss Nelly Ann Robbins was the featured attraction at the Bunker Hill celebration.

Extracted from the same above mentioned program was the following entitled "Old Age".

"So you feel old and think your best years are behind you? Nonsense. The history of the world's accomplishments is dotted with great things which great men did at a great age. Consider the following:—

Verdi had reached the age of 85 when he produced his most enduring masterpiece, including "Aida" and "Ave Maria".

Titan painted his famous "Battle of Lepanto" when he was 98.

Goethe completed the second part of his masterpiece, "Faust" when he was 80.

Benjamin Franklin was 83 when he served as one of the makers of the U. S. Constitution.

Gladstone at 83 began his fourth term as minister of Great Britain, and at 87 was still making speeches. Michelangelo painted "The Last Supper" at the age of 66, and was building St. Peter's in Rome when he died at the age of 89.

Commodore Vanderbilt accumulated 100 million dollars after he was 70 years old.

Cato, the Roman, began to study Greek when he was 80.

The average man of 80 is only 50 percent slower than the average man at 40. Many Men at 40 are slower than others at 80.

At a desk high above New York's fashionable Fifth Avenue, Benson Storer sits before hundreds of vials of blend perfume.

In the perfume business Storer is known as a "nose." There is not more than half a dozen men with his talent in all the world.

Storer spends most of his time sniffing thousands of perfume fragrances but modestly declines credit for his unusual ability, even though he can identify any mixture by smelling it.

"A sensitive nose is something you're born with," he says. "My own son, who is vice-president of my company, has only a fair sense of smell."

Storer got into business naturally enough. His father, too, was a "nose." His first job was selling a line of perfume in New England and acquiring a reputation for his knowledge of the business.

Three years later he went into business for himself and began manufacturing perfumes and toilet and bath preparations. In 1932 he bought a famous French house. Since then, Storer has added six new fragrances.

When the "nose" smells something he actually tastes it in his mouth. He seldom smokes, because tobacco might affect his acute sense of smell. He is flattered when anyone calls him a "nose." In his business that's the highest compliment anyone can pay a man.

Storer is in early middle-age, is tall, well-built and attractive. He is meticulous in his dress and his haberdashery (on this occasion) was quiet-almost nondescript in coloring and design. He wears a close-cropped rather blonde moustache and his manner is friendly and perhaps a trifle bashful. He is in New Orleans for the Fete Des Parfums, sponsored by the Fashion Group of which Connie Madden Brodman is an originator and former president.

It says here:—"You'll be wearing that little black dress with brown accessories this year." I hope not! Black and brown were never meant as co-partners.

MISSISSIPPI TAKING WINGS

Mississippi, with a long and colorful history behind her, has only recently become of age—air age, that is.

Although Mississippians have been riding in commercial planes and operating quonset planes and private ships for the past 20 years, not until 1946 was the advent of the air age considered by our lawmakers.

Now, thanks to our legislature which created the Mississippi Aeronautics Commission in 1946, the state not only is becoming air-minded but is enjoying the transportation benefits of this modern air age.

Skeptics may be interested to learn that 700 airplanes are owned by Mississippians; that the state now boasts 82 airports, 34 of which are municipal, 26 commercial, and 22 private.

Aside from private flying airplanes in Mississippi today are used for a variety of essential services. These include forest fire patrol, power line and pipe line patrol, aerial mapping, flood control, aerial advertising, personnel transportation, student instruction, and agriculture.

In one field of agriculture alone the airplane has proven indispensable. In 1945, for instance, 267 airplanes distributed 30,747,460 pounds of insecticides and defoliant on approximately 950,000 acres of Mississippi cotton. Without these intrepid planes dusting pilots Mississippi's bumper cotton crop in 1951 might not have been possible.

Although cotton dusting is a hazardous occupation it is surprising to note that only two fatalities occurred in 1950 despite the heavy use of planes for dusting.

Although these statistics may not seem too impressive on the surface they do show the increasing and widespread use to which the airplane is being put in the Magnolia State and the necessity for an agency to promote aviation and enforce laws set up to govern their operation.

That is where the Mississippi Aeronautics Commission came in. One of the first assignments of the commission was to recommend appropriate aviation legislation. The result was the present uniform state aviation law which was passed by the 1948 legislature and which is backed by several national aviation laws.

Additional duties given the Commission by this law include state enforcement of air safety laws, issuance of rules and regulations concerning aviation, granting of permits to intrastate airlines, regulation of airports, approval of airport sites, and operation of airports.

The Uniform Airport Zoning Act was also recommended and passed by the legislature. This Act gives the municipalities of the state the power to zone their airports.

Under this Act the Federal Government will maintain funds for the airport construction and operation. Under this Act the airports have been centralized in the state.

The Mississippi Aeronautics Commission was created by the legislature of 1946. It is a body of five members appointed by the governor. Its members are: Frank R. W. Goss, Chairman; H. W. Goss, Jr.; J. W. Goss; J. W. Goss; J. W. Goss.

MISSISSIPPI TAKING WINGS

Many airports and facilities such as this at Tupelo, are made possible through federal aid and through the cooperation of the Mississippi Aeronautics Commission. Mississippi today boasts airports and has four major commercial airlines serving 12 cities.

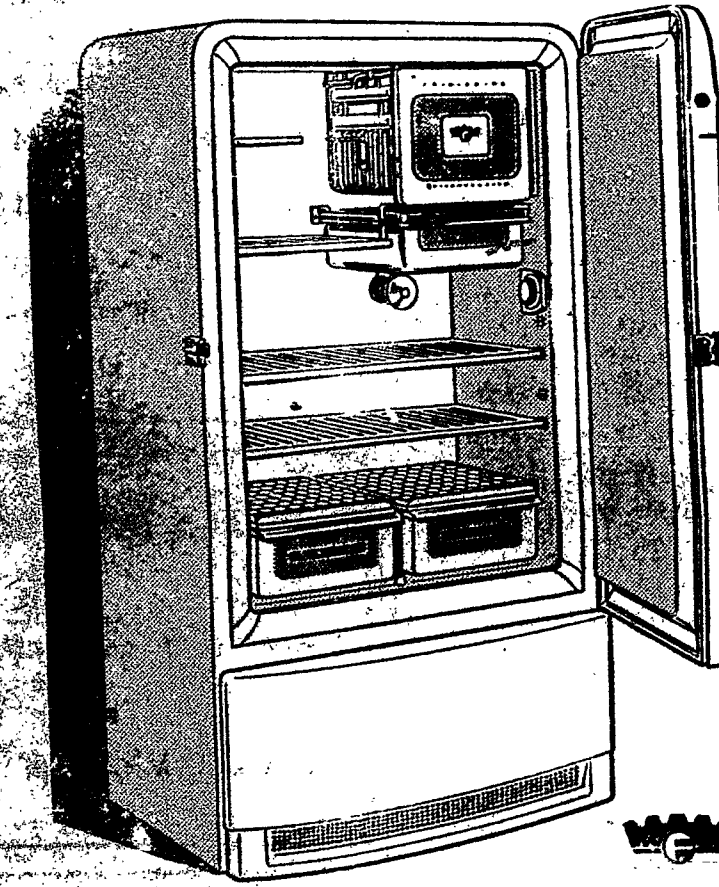

The Uniform State Aviation Law was recommended to and passed by the 1948 Legislature. This bill was drafted by the Council of State Governments and the National Association of State Aeronautics Officials. It has been accepted nationwide by Mississippi.

The Commission also has been authorized to issue "Air Age" stamps to schools, civic clubs, and interested groups.

The Commission is currently working on a state plan for aviation. It is the director of Civil Aviation, the Civil Air Patrol, and the Mississippi Aeronautics Commission. It also hopes soon to have an airport marking system in Mississippi.
